Dear Dorothy:

Thank you for your notes of June 9th about various people: I will try to put them to good use.

About indexes of your own involvement in clinical versus other forms of research (and this is perhaps a silly perspective altogether) I think the question might be put: how many bed days a year in a clinical research center would be required for and justified by your current pattern of research activity, or prospectively if it were to be optimally matched to your own intrinsic interests and the scientific challenges of the field?

Yours sincerely,

Joshua Lederberg
